Forty-nine towns in the Second District gave Poland, Republican, a majority over all of 1,725. The Legislature will show a decrease of the Republican majority.

Late dispatches from White River Junction, Vermont, say that the election of Poland from the Second District is somewhat doubtful. There are eighty-one towns to be heard from in the District, thirteen of which in Orleans county have gone for Grant

FURTHER RETURNS.

BURLINGTON, Sept. 6.—The election returns come in slowly beyond precedent, much less than half the State having been heard from. The returns indicate a Republican vote of 35,000 and a Democratic vote of 15,000. The vote is very light in the Second District. Only five towns have been heard from. Less than half of these give Poland 7488; Fletcher, 5453; Grant and scattering, 2802. The indications are that there is no choice, which will necessitate a second election. In the First District Stewart is elected by 10,000 majority.

South Carolina Greenbackers.

COLUMBIA, S. C. Sept. 6.—At the Greenback Convention D. H. McLean was nominated for Governor by acclamation, and R. D. White for Lieutenant-Governor. White declined, but the convention refused to accept his declination. Augustus Sanders was nominated for Attorney-General. The convention made the following additional nominations: Secretary of State, H. O. Haskins; Comptroller-General, George Corley; Surveyor-General, C. B. Farmer; Treasurer, W. H. Stanton; Adjutant Inspector-General, J. F. Johns; Superintendent of Education, Rev. G. D. Dunham. J. B. Campbell, of Charlestown, was nominated for Congress in the First District; T. A. Russell, of Anderson, from the Third; D. R. Elkin, of Fairfield, from the Fourth; T. A. McKay from the Fifth; Dr. Bowen, of Marion, from the Sixth. Adjourned.

Nevada Democratic Convention.

EUREKA, Nev., Sept. 6.—The Democratic State Convention assembled at 12:30, and was called to order by J. A. Mahanny, Secretary of the State Central Committee. A temporary organization was effected with Hon. George W. Baker, of Eureka, as Chairman, and J. A. Mahanny, of Storey, as Secretary. A Committee on Credentials was appointed. Adjourned for one hour.

THE PLATFORM.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—A Eureka, Nev., dispatch says: At the evening session of the Democratic State Convention the common platform was reported. The platform reaffirms the platform of the last National Convention; affirms that railroads should be made to pay their just burdens of taxation; calls for the passage by Congress of the Reagan bill and of laws by the State Legislature to regulate freights and fares on railroads within the State; resolved that the financial condition of the affairs of the State requires the calling of a constitutional convention to reduce the expenses of the state and county governments; that a Board of Equalization should be created; condemns the efforts of the Republican party to destroy our dominant interest in their attacks upon silver; that the maximum rate now permitted of twenty cents per mile for each ton of freight, and ten cents per mile for each passenger carried by railroads between points within the State should be reduced at least one-half; that the Legislature should protect individuals and localities against discrimination; that from all nominees to the Legislature a pledge be exacted to carry out the passage of laws to regulate freights and fares; that Senator Fair and Congressman Cassidy are entitled to the thanks of their constituents for their labors in Congress; that the platform adopted by the Republicans of the State and the candidates nominated by the convention at Reno warrant the charge that both platform and ticket have been constructed at the dictation of the railroad managers.

Jewett W. Adams was put in nomination for Governor amid applause. The nominations closed, and Adams was declared the nominee by acclamation. Hon. Geo. W. Cassidy was nominated for Congress-man. Col. M. N. Stone, of Virginia, was nominated for Justice of the Supreme Court by acclamation.

Democratic Victory in Arkansas.

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 5.—Sasck, the Republican nominee for Governor, who resides here and is very popular, has carried the county. He doubtless leads the Republican ticket in the State 1500 votes. Returns show increased Democratic majorities on the State ticket. The majority is larger than was anticipated. The Greenback vote is very small.

The crew was saved and sheltered at the United States Signal Station till the arrival of the whalers Bowhead and Belvidere, which took them off, except the captain and engineer, who choose to remain at the station.

A Wreck Found.

FRANKPORT, Mich., Sept. 6.—Captain Mathews, of the life-saving station, reports that he found, bottom up, the side of a steamer, with the upper cabin corresponding to the Anchor Line boat. The agent of the line in Chicago thinks that the description does not tally with that of their boat. The Annie Young, however, is overdue and possibly may have met with disaster.

THE QUESTION.

We are inclined to agree with the Herald that the chief question upon which the present political canvass should be made in Southern California (and we may add the balance of the State), is, whether or not the Sunday law shall be repealed.

Regarding monopolies and Chinese immigration, both parties propose to be on the same side, but on the Sunday law there is a square, well-defined issue. At the behest of the League of Freedom the Democracy have promised to repeal the Sunday law, while at the bidding of all that is sacred in American institutions, the Republican party has promised that it shall not be repealed.

This is not only an important question because the repeal of the Sunday law would take away from the laboring man his assurance of one day in seven for rest and recreation; it is important not only because so many thousands of American-born citizens love the Sabbath as the day they have been taught to reverence; it is important not only because the Sunday law is in accord with the divine law; it is not only important for numerous other reasons, but it is doubly important because of the manner in which it has been brought before the people. This question involves the additional question whether the laws on our statute books are to be respected and obeyed, or, at the behest of any who may oppose them, be first set at defiance by means of perjured jurors, incompetent officers, and the sharp practices and quibbles of lawyers, and then repealed at the behest of a law-defying league.

This latter phase of the question is brought prominently before the people in the present contest, and on its decision depends largely whether we shall have in this country of boasted freedom the liberty that is secured by respect for law and order, or the liberty of anarchy and mob law, which is the death-knell of all true liberty and the first step toward despotism.

IN this State, where the observance of Sunday has been notoriously disregarded, the only issue between the political parties is the retention of a Sunday law which has been on the statute books for twenty-five years without being enforced, and which, in nearly one thousand actions brought under it, has been shown to be unenforcible.—[Sacramento Record-Union.

Even admitting this to be true, (and it is a humiliating admission,) it does not relieve moral and Christian citizens from the responsibility of defending the Sunday law and exerting themselves for its enforcement. We are in favor of taking up the fight which the law-breakers have begun, and of battling for law and order till an elevated public sentiment shall be erected strong enough to enforce the one and preserve the other. The violators of law will yet learn that the people of California are determined to never surrender to them.

IT is said that the temperance people in California are 30,000 strong in organized bodies. If they make no separate nominations for State offices—and one of their leading representatives, Judge Thompson, says they will make none—they will make themselves felt on whichever side they espouse in the canvass. It is perfectly safe to say that that side will not be the Democratic.

THE criticism is made by a Republican cotemporary that while the League of Freedom was strongly represented at the Sacramento Convention, the temperance and religious organizations sent no advocate to that body. So much the more reason for the latter class making themselves felt in the election.

THE San Bernardino Times, referring to the proposed free public fountain to be erected in Los Angeles, invites the projectors to pipe the water needed for the purpose from San Bernardino. Thanks! We suppose this generous offer is made because the people over there never use water.

LIMA BEANS.

There are two or three limited districts in Santa Barbara county, the principal of which is the Carpinteria, lying on the coast to the eastward of the town, where the Lima bean is grown to perfection. The next in importance are Goleta and La Patera, also lying on the coast, to the westward of the town. Those districts furnish the larger share of the Lima beans that find their way into commerce, and the industry has consequently become, within a very few years, one of great importance to that county. The pursuit has generally proved highly profitable to the growers, they realizing gross returns of from $66 to $110 per acre from their crops. This has had the effect of stimulating production to the highest point, especially in the fertile Carpinteria—so much so that Lima-bean-growing has become a positive "rage" among owners of lands adapted to their culture.

The Carpinteria is an exceptionally beautiful spot on the seacoast—a charming nook among the hills, dotted with ancient and wide-spreading live-oaks, sheltered from rude winds by encircling lomas y cerritos, possessing a soil of great depth and inexhaustible fertility, and watered by perennial streams of purest water, flowing right out of the heart of the rugged range which forms the picturesque background of the valley. The whole district is no larger than a moderate-sized stock rancho, yet, subdivided as it is into scores of small and highly-cultivated farms, it supports in comfort and even affluence a numerous population. Lima beans are by no means the only or principal crop grown there: they are only "a circumstance." The cereals, root crops and the finest fruits are grown to perfection and in prolific abundance. But the bean crop is no trifling one. Sold at prices ranging from 2½ to 6 cents the pound, it has in former years brought more than $40,000 in a single season.

So great is the demand for "bean lands" in that favored valley that the standard prices for the best tracts have risen from $30 and $40 per acre—the prices of the last decade—to $150 and $200 per acre, with very little to be had even at those figures. We have often thought that if the price of beans keeps up, there will soon be not a forest tree left there to give grateful shade and lend beauty to the landscape. This would be a great calamity to a rare and lovely spot, because the denuding of any region of its timber, especially in a so-called "rainless" country, tends directly to the production of drouths.

It was recently reported that the extreme heat of the last month had prematurely dried up the growing bean crops of the Carpinteria; but later information is to the effect that this statement is only partially true. Some of the growers report that a third, and others that a half of the crop has been scorched so as to be practically ruined. We can hardly believe that the damage is general on account of the heat, for the sun's rays are always tempered there by the gentle sea-breeze ever blowing from the Pacific.

WE are glad to learn that the Veterans' Home Association has been vigorously and completely reorganized. The Secretary was legislated out of office, and H. A. Gorley, who has been acting as assistant secretary at $125 per month, (and playing Democratic convert) also had the underpinning knocked from under him. No more "traveling expenses" are to be allowed the directors while hunting a site for a home, but the Association will itself determine upon the site. Stringent auditing regulations have been adopted, and an expert accountant employed to overhaul the accounts. This is all good, and looks like economy and efficiency in the management of the Association's affairs henceforth.

The assertion that the bones of Guiteau are bleaching in the Army Medical Museum, preparatory to the articulation of a skeleton, is confidently repeated by the Washington Star, which adds that the bones are unusually porous and require special care in handling.

The American people don't care a continental about the articulation of Guiteau's skeleton, so long as the articulation of the wretch himself has been stopped.

MR. D. M. KENFIELD, Secretary of State, did a very foolish and mean thing when he dismissed a deputy in his office who had aspired to a political nomination at the hands of the Sacramento Republican Convention.

MEN AND WOMEN.

Justice of the Supreme Court Field and Mrs. Field have returned to the East by the overland train.

There is no foundation for a rumor in circulation that General Howard seeks to have the order assigning him to the command of the Department of the Platte rescinded. He is making all his arrangements to take command at Omaha on the date fixed in the order.

One of the latest army rumors is that upon the retirement of General McDowell, next month, Brigadier-General Miles will be brought down from the North and placed in command of the Department of California, with headquarters at the Presidio, and that General Schofield, who is to command the Division, will reside at Black Point.

It is a noticeable fact that a large majority of the births this year in the West have been girls. Our girls are of a superior quality, and are in demand, says a Chicago paper. The West believes in regulating the supply by the demand. We can raise a good crop of anything, but there is nothing the great West takes more pride in than its crop of blooming, healthful, sensible, live girls.

One evening the Empress Maria Theresa gave a grand concert at her palace in Vienna. A young prodigy of an artist, only eight years of age, was to make his appearance at court. His success was stupendous, and he was recalled, a very unusual thing in so august an assembly. Unfortunately, as he was stepping forward to bow his thanks, his foot slipped and he fell. A young lady then rushed forward to pick him up, and inquired, "Have you hurt yourself?" The little fellow looked at her intently for a few moments, then exclaimed with a face beaming with smiles, "Oh! what a beautiful young lady you are! will you marry me, say?" A burst of laughter greeted this ingenuous proposal. The amiable young lady was Marie Antoinette, the future wife of Louis XVI., and the little boy-musician—self, perhaps the reader has already guessed—was no other than Wolfgang Mozart.

UNKNOWN SHIP.

The white foam broke the livelong day;
The scudding clouds hung harsh and grey;
The sea-mew fled; and cold and dead
The near horizon lay.

Over the shingles' slippery path,
The hissing waters slid in wrath,
Cutting the long brown sea-weed down,
As a mower cuts his swath.

The rack of a wild, disheveled sky,
Flashed on as war-steeds frighted fly;
And the swollen sea, like a life to be,
Broke with a bitter cry.

Far up, the coast-lamp's fiery head
Watched like a watcher of the dead;
Muted and dim the sea-line's rim,
Dipped in its ocean bed.

What is that form so far away,
Mingled and mixed with the dying day?
Nay! 'tis no form, but a phantom born
From the wrath of the dashing spray.

Born of the spray—the billow's sheath!
The shipwrecked mariner's funeral wreath!
The foam that flies in drowning eyes,
Choking the struggler's breath!

What is yon form? It is gliding nearer;
Bold is the hand of its ghostly steerer!
"Down, helmsman, down!" but the hoarse waves drown
The ears of the phantom hearer.

The twilight shuts like a prison door;
Louder and shriller the breakers roar;
And the wind's wild rout blows the watch-fire out,
Built upon the rocky shore.

All night long the gale had sway;
Men shuddered and dreaded the dawning day;
Till the morning came with an angry flame
Where the sky and the waters lay.

But where was the unknown ship that passed,
With her sails blown out on the straining blast?
With her silent crew and her weird lights blue,
At the peak of her straining mast?

She loomed through the tempest; she vanished away,
In peril and storm ere the break of day:
Thus the story is told! for never hath rolled
Cargo nor coffer from cabin or hold,
Corpse of sailor nor glittering gold,
To the beach of that rock-bound bay.

HOW HE SAVED HER:

AN ORIGINAL STORY FOUNDED ON EARLY CALIFORNIAN HISTORY.

BY H. W. B.

(Concluded)

How long she sat with these curses ringing in her ears, she knew not. A restless, anxious expression fell upon the features. Every sudden sound made her start involuntarily. Oh! would her husband soon return, and yet she dared not tell him. Did not his life hang upon the disclosure? What could she do? She had the morrow to make plans for her safety. Did Morego think her the fool? Every bit of the fiery blood in her nature boiled. To go to him, never! And his life would pay the penalty, coward that he was. With such resolves she passed the night. She knew her husband would spend the day at his business, and she could make her preparations without awakening his suspicions. She felt in her soul this would be the end of the farce. She had already suffered enough through Morego, but this would end it all. She knew when the end of the new year came, Morego should be a prisoner and at her mercy. She thought of her kind husband, of his tenderness to her, and at all times so watchful. But why did he linger so long this morning? It seemed as if he could not tear himself from her side. He promised to be with her early on the evening of the New Year. So kissing her adieu—he left her. Long she watched him until he disappeared from view. She then set herself to work at her plans of safety. She had made up her mind to make her way under cover of night to the home of Don Alvarado, the Governor. The Mission of Yerba Buena was situated two and a half miles from the cove. She would go to him and ask his protection. She had no doubt but that Morego intended to place her on board the Vixen and set sail for some other country. She well knew he would carry out all he had resolved, and her caution alone would save her and her husband. She watched every stroke of the clock. One hour more and the darkness would cover her flight. She threw around her shoulders a mantle, and over her head drew tightly a grey hood. She had hastily penned a note to her husband with these words: "Anita will come again. On our lives do not attempt to search for her. Danger awaits both."

She placed the paper where he could find it, and, drawing her mantle around her, stepped forth into the darkness. Had she no fear that Morego had set watches upon her? It had not crossed Anita's mind that such could be the case, but the suspicious Mexican had taken that precaution. He meant to have Anita at any risk. If she failed to meet him at the cove, his trusty was to enter the house, seize and bind her, and if her husband interfered his orders were to make short work of him, at the same time placing in his hand his stiletto. His trusty was to secrete himself behind the cabin of Captain Philips and watch their movements. But Anita had taken an earlier start and had gotten well on her way before the Mexican had sallied forth to take his position. "At nine be at the cove," was his master's orders, "and if you fail to bear your precious burden your life will pay the forfeit."

The trusty knew too well his master kept his word, but he had no idea of using violence. Hardened as he was in crime, he had not forgotten the reception the Yankee Captain had given him when he first entered the harbor, and his heart had softened toward him. He had made up his mind that if Morego's intention was to carry off Anita he would have no hand in the matter further than to aid Anita and take the desperate chances of his life.

The old Mission bell faintly tolled the hour of eight. "One hour more, and I'll have my beauty with me," muttered Morego; "I have given orders that at nine, sharp, we set sail. I must be here or I will be suspected. Will not the Yankee curse when he misses his beauty? Ha! ha! but I'll foil him—the blue nose! He robbed me, and I've not laid low for nothing. I'd like to see him squirm when my trusty lashes him. Trusty has never failed me, and he'll not do it now. Oh, no; I'll trust my life with him; a Mexican never goes back on his word. When we've once set sail, good-by to old Don, his vessel and his baby! Ha! ha! it does me good to think of it. One little hour more, and the bottle I gave the trusty will have put her so soundly to sleep that we'll be well out to sea before she will awaken, and then won't she rave to find herself in my arms instead of the handsome Captain's? But then when she finds she's with me, I'll make her love me, and I'll whisper in her ear the story her father told to the lovely señorita, and then, when she left her home and followed him to sunny Spain, he threw her off and married the dark-eyed beauty, her mother. Revenge is sweet, and the years have only seemed days since I left home to follow the fate and fortune of the man who robbed me. She will ask me the fate of my señorita, and then I will point her to the grave on the hillock, under waving palmettos, and tell her there lies my heart also, and revenge is sweet! Nineteen years! 'Tis but a day in time, and who would think that under this swarthy complexion was skin as fair as maiden's. Look at the dye! Why, my own father would shun me. But at nine be ready, my boys; we then set sail."

Anita hurried along until she reached the home of Alvarado. Half-fainting, she fell into the door. The quick eye of the Don at once saw something unusual had taken place. He at once lifted the fainting girl to the couch and summoned his servant to bring restoratives. Anita soon opened her eyes, and at once told the Don the story.

Captain Philip closed up his office and set out for home. He was in unusual good spirits, for Anita had been more cheerful on the morning than was her wont. As he neared the house he listened for the evening song that she always sang as a greeting. But no sound met his ear, all was deathly stillness. A thousand strange thoughts filled his mind. Perhaps she was ill. He gently opened the door and entered. As he struck a light, something fluttered at his feet. He hastily picked it up, thinking it might be a message from Anita letting him know of her absence. Not so, it proved to be she note from Morego which Anita had dropped in her fright. Only one hour before the vessel would sail! Could he reach it in time? Surely Anita has been made the victim of some foul plot. Oh! only to save her!

Hastily scratching a line to his friend Alvarado asking his aid, he madly rushed to his office and dispatched his faithful Francisco to summon him. He knew he could get no help from the Mexicans, and his own crew would be powerless in the hands of so many, but he summoned them all and gave orders to watch. The note left the impression with him that active measures would be taken by Morego. Anita, dead or alive, would be borne on board the Vixen. He felt in his heart she was no willing partaker in the movement, and save her they must at the risk of their lives.

Morego's motive in appointing the early hour of nine o'clock to sail the Vixen was because he knew that Captain Philip never left his office till about that hour, and he could be well on his way before the Captain could reach his home and give the alarm.

As soon as Anita was sufficiently restored, and had told them the story, Alvarado called his servants and bade them prepare for the fray. He knew the Captain would make an effort to find Anita, and he would be captured himself and carried off when Morego found Anita did not come. He knew Morego would not leave a stone unturned to get one or the other. He had Carrillo ride beside him on his swift mustang, and with ten other stalwart fellows, they set out for the cove. Through sand and chapparel they hurried, and as the time pealed nine they reached the cove. The Vixen lay out in the stream, but not a soul could be seen on her decks. Captain Philip had no time to ask; he felt certain Anita had been carried on board the vessel. Would Alvarado ever come to their aid? Bidding his men lower the boats and taking a seat beside them, they rowed toward the Vixen. As they neared he saw preparations were being made to sail. In the darkness Captain Philip did not notice that Morego's trusty had taken a seat in the stern of their boat, and had sprung on the deck the instant they swung alongside. What could be the meaning of all this? The question flashed across the mind of Morego, who was pacing the deck lurid with rage, "I am betrayed into the hands of enemies," said he, "but they may quarter me before I surrender," at the same time making a strike at his trusty, who was well on the deck with the others. Hark! A gun is fired from the shore. Peering through the darkness he discovered two boats, well manned close alongside his vessel. "God be praised!" exclaimed Captain Philip. "Help is at hand." "Up anchor at once!" shouted Morego. But the crew either through fear or the advice of the trusty, never moved a hand. Again he gave the orders, but before he could move again he was seized by the orders of Alvarado.

The moon passed from under a cloud, showing the face of Morego, ashy-pale. In his anger he had torn away his mask and disclosed to Alvarado one whom he had long sought as a desperate character, "I have you, old boy," says Alvarado; "and what have you to say in your own behalf? Your deeds have found you out, and you need expect no mercy at my hands."

Morego's rage knew no bounds. To find himself thus thwarted and in the hands of his own men, to whom he had looked for protection was more than he could bear. He rushed toward the Captain, hissing oaths at his failure. "You have robbed me of my bride. You took her from her sunny home; she is mine and should years roll over your head I will yet have her, will yet call her mine. I swear!" "What have you to say in your own defense?" again questioned Alvarado. No answer came from Morego. Again he asked, turning to the crew, "To whom belongs this vessel?" "She is the Vixen of Monterey," coasting here and there said the trusty.

"Have I no friends?" cried Morego. "Will not one of my crew offer to unbind and set me free?" No one dared stir. The decree had gone forth from Governor Alvarado to take the prisoner bound below, and in the morning to bring him ashore to await trial for piracy on the high seas; a crime punishable by death, and Morego knew it well. He also knew that to fall into the hands of his own crew, even, was without mercy, and in vain did he plead.

To send for aid to his friends in Monterey he had no time, and he was the picture of despair. Even his men, who had before looked up to him, now turned the cold shoulder. He sent his trusty and offered cattle and bribes of money. But what was his surprise when he tore from his face the false whiskers and threw from his head a wig, disclosing to Morego the brother of Salvador, whom he had shot in a duel some years before. Alvarado had also recognized him the night before, and had charged the men on their life to secure the prisoner safe. It was now the time for Morego to plead for mercy. He sent for Captain Philip and offered him all he possessed, promising to leave the country as soon as released. How could he expect mercy when he had shown none? He told the Captain how he had wandered for nineteen years an outcast, seeking revenge on the father of Anita for robbing him of his bride expectant. That in his frenzy and in an unguarded moment he had shot and killed one called Salvador, the brother of whom was the "trusty" to whom he had given the business of securing Anita.

"I am betrayed into the hands of enemies," he said "and my only hope is that you will forgive my rashness and come to my aid." "But what were your plans," asked the Captain, "had you secured Anita?" "Dropping down with the tide," said he, "I calculated to have Anita on board, and taking the flood tide in the vicinity of Alcatraz, and as it swept me up the bay I would endeavor to get through Angel Island straits, and then wait at anchor for a favorable opportunity to escape to sea, and bid good-bye forevermore to the old Don, and with Anita I would be happy in my own loved land of Spain."

Alvarado had hastened before the Don to apprise Anita of the safety of her husband, leaving the Captain in charge of the Vixen till the morning. The shock to her nerves was too great, and she fell into swoon after swoon until the faithful servants began to despair of saving her life. She would call for her husband and upbraid herself for not telling him all, and have thus saved themselves and their friends much trouble. Alvarado assured her that all was right; but for him, a long-sought-for murderer would have escaped justice. A heavy account hung over his head, but now save him. But for the vessel belonging to her father and his old friend, the order would have been given to blow her up with Morego on board.

The morning broke, and the storm in all its fury raged; the sea was lashing the vessel's sides in all its madness. Morego's groans could be heard below, and curses and oaths went up from the hold where now lay in chains the once defiant Spaniard. "What is to be done with me?" he would say; "Am I to be tortured in this manner, and no one to care—no one to come to my aid? Anita, my beauty!" he cried; "come to me only once! Say to me you pity me, and I die, no matter how foul the death, I die happy! Come!" But no one offered a helping hand. His trusty was too busy with his own thoughts to give attention to the murderer. He was preparing in his mind a way to rid the earth of one who had caused him years of sorrow. He had no notion of letting him (Morego) go on land and take any of the chances of escape. Slyly he had mixed a powder, and while preparing his early meal he poured it into his coffee and then exultingly sat at a distance, saw him sip it until he fell into a stupor. One, two, three. The bells began to strike the hour for the appearance of Alvarado and his men. Soon a little boat was to put off from shore, and all knew at once that Morego's time had come. Captain Philip knew Alvarado would make short work of his prisoner, and he felt a pity after all. Surely, he thought, he has some friends; some one to whom he could send a message. I will go to him, in spite of all he has done to me; I will go to him and ask him. As he raised the hatchway a sight met his eyes. There lay Morego, pale, and with his eyes fixed in the agony of death. The Captain went to him and raised him, and with a cup of water bathed his lips, but no sound save the death-rattle met his ear. He summoned the crew, not one of whom would come down to help the wretch who but the day before was all joy and life among them. The trusty had had his revenge, and Morego lay dead in the arms of the Captain.

When Alvarado stepped upon the deck of the vessel he was met by the trusty, who made a full confession of the matter, and Alvarado felt that the dead man had met a just fate. No bell pealed out the mournful cadence. Not even a sailor looked sad. They all felt as Morego's dead body went over the vessel's side that better his body be food for the fishes than he to live and heap misery on the heads of others, as he would have done.

The Vixen was put in charge of the trusty, who took her to Monterey. Don Castro was never more surprised than when he heard the story, and learned of the escape of his daughter. He declared he had never liked the rascal, and he was now glad the country was rid of him. He at once gave the command of the Vixen to the trusty, whom he learned was a friend of his father's, and to whom he owed a debt of gratitude.

Captain Philip made haste to Anita. He was met at the door by the old servant, and bade be cautious on entering the room, "as the madam had been very ill and has continually cried to be taken to her dear husband. But she is better," smiled the old servant, "and gives you joy." The Captain entered noiselessly. As he drew closer to the couch, the feeble wail of an infant met his ears. Yes, Anita has lived, thought he, and God be praised. He bent over her sleeping form and thanked Heaven she was saved. Anita's joy knew no bounds when she knew her husband was safe and near her. "And of Morego?" was her first question, the Captain told her of his breathing his last in his arms.

"Poor girl," he would say, "she has suffered enough already, but her future will be no more darkened. They lingered under the roof of Alvarado until Anita and her boy baby could with safety be taken to her own home. Alvarado had called the boy Pio Pico, and the fond mother relates to the grand-children, as they sit around her knee, how on that wild night their father was ushered into this breathing world, and she points to the spot in the bay where the Vixen lay at anchor. Richly freighted ships from every land pass over the spot where the good ship Hardy, commanded by their grandfather, first cast anchor. Where once stood the cabin from which Anita fled for her life on the New Year's eve, now stands princely palaces, or regal buildings of business. The beaten path over which she fled like a hunted deer is now a broad, paved street, lined with brick and granite dwellings, and among the wealthiest of Yerba Buena's citizens the name of their grand-father stands at the head. San Francisco citizen-pointwith pride to the elegant residences the hero of this story has reared in their proud city. Beginning business in a canvass tent near the cove, in later years he found himself the owner of millions, and his children called him blessed. Never was there kinder father, and never was there woman prouder to call such as he husband. H. W. B.

AINAXAB,
The Celebrated Egyptian Elixir for the Skin.
We herewith append a few testimonials:
SAN FRANCISCO, March 29, 1882.
GENTLEMEN:—I have been using your Ainaxab, and find it a most delicious elixir, not only beneficial but agreeably refreshing for the skin. I shall continue to use it. Please send me three bottles. Yours truly,
IDA VON TRAUTMANN,
Directress Gaustinger Opera Troupe, S. F.
I have used your Ainaxab in my family for some time, and am much pleased with its action. It has a pleasant and cooling sensation to the skin, and to those affected with black spots or face worms, I can heartily recommend it, as their removal is almost instantaneous, one or two applications accomplishing the desired result. Respectfully, Dr. C. W. HIBBARD,
22 Stockton St., San Francisco.
SAN FRANCISCO, April 17, 1882.
GENTLEMEN:—I have used your Ainaxab for two months, and find that it possesses all the good qualities you claim for it. I think it the best thing to remove the bad effects of paints or dry make up. I shall continue to use it as it gives me entire satisfaction.
Respectfully yours, LOUISE LESTER,
Prima Donna, Tivoli Theater.
I am not in the habit of giving testimonials, but take pleasure in saying to those who use face washes or powders of any kind, that none has given me more satisfaction or comfort than your Ainaxab. I feel convinced that when once used, society will be without it. From my own experience and observation of the effect of the Ainaxab upon others, I am thoroughly convinced that it is all you claim.
MRS. M. KEAKER, Nucleus Hotel, S. F.
If you do not find the Ainaxab at your druggists, enclose One Dollar in postage stamps to postal order to our address, and it will be sent by express free of charge.

Choice Groceries, Provisions & Country Produce
In any quantity desired. Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico trade a speciality.
Our assortment is complete, and we can fill any sized order, from five cents to a thousand dollars, upon the shortest notice.
Our country customers, who live at a distance, can send in their orders to be filled and shipped by rail, and they will be dealt with as fairly and honestly as though the goods were passed to them over the counter.
The name, GRANGE STORE, has become a household term in nearly every home in and tributary to this city, and we are happy to know that nearly all our oldest customers, who began trading with us years ago, have ever continued and are still dealing with us.
Our strong point, however, lies in the fact, that our goods are CHOICE, and that we will not carry inferior or second class goods upon any consideration.
Gilt Edged Butter is one of our specialties, and to this firm is due the full credit of first introducing this brand of butter to the trade of Southern California.
The Seuseca Falls Dry Hop Yeast is another specialty which is becoming very popular with housewives. Every package is fully warranted to make white, light, sweet and healthful bread, when used according to directions. Sample packages given away.
We invite all whose attention is called to the above facts to give us a trial. This invitation is hardly necessary in the case of our old customers, because we know that they will come; therefore, it will apply more particularly to those who have never dealt with us. Look in upon us. If we cannot sell you something we will give you something; you need not go away empty handed.

Cards are out for the wedding of Mr. J. C. Fitzhenry and Miss Blanche Shackleford. The wedding will occur on Wednesday evening, September 13th, at the residence of Miss Shackleford's uncle, Dr. Davenpart, on Main Street, and the reception will be held at the same place on the 19th. Mr. Fitzhenry is a member of the firm of Fitzhenry & Mansfield, grocers of Tombstone, Arizona, and was for some time a resident of this city. Miss Shackleford is one of the jolliest girls of this city and she will be severely missed from the society circles here, when she exchanges her residence to Tombstone.

East Los Angeles Notes.

The new Methodist Church is receiving the finishing touches at the hands of carpenters and painters. It will be one of the neatest churches in the southern country, and is an ornament to East Los Angeles. This, with the fine schoolhouse being erected, and the many dwellings in course of construction, indicate a pleasing condition of prosperity.

Excelsior.

A lot 40x165 feet between First and Second streets, on Spring, was purchased by its present owner about a year and a-half ago, for $3000. An offer of $10,000 was made for the same property yesterday, which shows that Los Angeles property has not been standing still in respect to increase of value.

Live Stock for Arizona.

The Niles Brothers shipped yesterday three fine thoroughbred Berkshire pigs and a white Leghorn rooster to Governor Gosper, of Prescott, Arizona. The stock was selected by Mr. Gosper himself during his visit here two weeks ago, and is an exceptionally fine lot.

A Little Boy's Wish.

The TIMES has received the following letter written on a postal card and prints it with pleasure ver-batim.

MR. EDITOR:—I want to see the animals of Robinsons show very much. Please ask them to exibit them some morning separate from the circus so that all the little boys can see them. There is always such a crowd at the circus that you cant see the animals with any comfort.

LITTLE BOY.

Mr. Robinson will know when he reads the TIMES what this little boy wants, and the TIMES hopes the great showman will be able to gratify his request, for it is certain our boy correspondent speaks the mind of lots of other Los Angeles boys, on the animal show subject. May be if a great many other boys would write letters to the TIMES asking Old John Robinson to get up a separate show for them, he would, in the kindness of his heart, be so pleased and flattered that he would take pains to do it. Boys, try it.

From Newport.

Correspondence of the TIMES.]

NEWPORT, Sept. 7.—The Newport school closed for two weeks on Monday, the 4th instant, Mr. Forest Grover, teacher of the primary department, going to Arizona, he having got a school there.

Mrs. Nora Moesser returned last Monday from Illinois, where she had been on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Avas. She reports that country as beautifully warm, wet and breezy, with a little thunder, lightning, hail and cyclones thrown in.

Mr. J. D. Ott and wife returned from the East on Tuesday evening, after an absence of about two months.

The steamer Newport will arrive to-day or to-morrow with a full cargo for Santa Ana and San Bernardino.

The apple-trees of Mr. J. H. Moesser are breaking down with fruit. This part of the country is particularly adapted to apples, pears, prunes and apricots. B.

Arizona Items.

From the Tucson Citizen.]

Cicero Grimes, the surviving express robber, had apreliminary examination before Justice Allen who held him bailable at $10,000, but as he lacked the coin he was sent to jail.

The two men whom, while sleeping, two Mexicans attempted to brain with rocks, are reported to be quite seriously injured. Neither one had any arms with him, otherwise their assailants would not have got off so easily.

The present beautiful weather of Arizona cannot be excelled any where in the world.

The Santa Ana Bank Collapse.

J. D. Wetz, one of the heavy contractors of Santa Ana, was in the city yesterday and reports business good, but says the closing of the bank has caused a great set-back to building. Several parties had lumber on the ground to build, but were compelled to haul it back to the yards, as their money was lost in the collapse of the bank. The assignees say they cannot pay more than 25 cents on the dollar and some are offering to sell at 10 cents on the dollar. If Banker Seibert should turn up he would be handled without gloves.

Rancho Santa Margarita.

The reported sale of the Santa Margarita and Los Flores ranchos, the princely Forster estate, was not consummated, and all negotiations are declared off. This statement is made on the authority of one the prospective purchasers, Mr. Dan Murphy, who is now in this city. The whole estate was at one time valued by the late Don Juan Forster at $1,000,000. Los Flores rancho is occupied by Marcos A. Forster, son of the late Don Juan.

More Sheep for Texas.

Another train came up from Santa Ana last evening, consisting of twenty-one cars, loaded with sheep—a duplicate of the shipment noted a few days ago. H. L. Bentley, of Texas, is the purchaser, and they go to Tom Greene county. Hay and water are carried along in the cars with the sheep.

The Occidental Restaurant is reopened, and everything in readiness to accommodate the publi C. A. Brown, manager; G. J. Edgar, proprietor.

The Fire Bell.

An alarm of fire was turned in about half-past ten yesterday morning, proving to have its origin in Mr. J. L. Mann's little house on the hill, at the head of Franklin street. The engines were soon on the ground below, but their services were not needed. The house is occupied by Mr. T. J. Walton, and at the time of the fire Mrs. Walton was baking bread and had a rousing fire. Going into another portion of the house, she found on her return that the boards of the wall back of the stove had ignited and were blazing up furiously. She succeeded in putting out the fire, as she supposed, but soon discovered that it had communicated through the wall with a closet adjoining, and here the fire was raging. She raised the alarm at this time, and with the assistance of neighbors the flames were controlled. If there had been a scarcity of water at that time, such as is almost the normal condition of things at many of the hill places, it is quite likely the place could not have been saved.

Something New in Los Angeles, and of Interest to all.

Next Monday, September 11th, we shall place in position and ready for inspection and use, in suitable parlor rooms, on the southwest corner of First and Fort streets, entrance on Fort street, on ground floor, the celebrated Drs. Hoffman and Palmer's Improved Vita Electro-Therapeutic Bath, for the scientific administration of medical electricity by insulation through increasing warmth and electrized vapor, constituting the most complete invigorating and purifying bath ever administered and enjoyed by man.

The baths are beautifully constructed, black walnut cabinet, with French veneered trimming, the interior coated with paraffine, a non-conductor of electricity and disinfectant. The internal system of conductors embrace a footstool and a seat with piano-stool screw for raising and lowering so head of patient will be out. At the back and side of the cabinet are doubly adjustable electrodes, constructed with a truss spring and hard rubber insulator, which localizes the current to the spine. These electrodes work on perpendicular and lateral bars and are firmly adjusted to position by thumb-screws. The entire system of electrodes are constructed of due brass, nickel-plated, and connections formed by binding posts. The interior construction is finished by the best instrument makers in the United States, and for beauty, durability and fine electrical action surpasses anything heretofore discovered. In the therapeutical action, it cleanses the skin and opens the pores, purifies the blood by removing the impurities which accumulate in the fluids and tissues of the body, and relieves congestion, overcomes catarrhal inflammation, and subdues rheumatic fever, imparting vigor to the system and strength to the mind. It is the light, life and hope of the afflicted. We invite the afflicted, and those interested in the march of therapeutical science to come and investigate our bath combination. See our circulars next week.

DR. A. MEEK & SON.

Some Close Hay Figures.

To the Editor of The Times:

SIR: In you paper of the 5th inst. I read a communication on the subject of the hay supply of our county, signed by M. P. Cutler. As there are many others who profess to believe there is a scarcity of hay in our county, and more who wish to have a scarcity, in order that they may realize a higher value for stock in hand, and yet others who have produced, bought and stored all they can carry, for speculative purposes—for these, and for the business welfare of our city, I desire to offer a few remarks on this subject. Mr. Cutler says he does not believe there are more than twelve hundred tons of hay for sale in all the district comprised within, to wit: this city, Wilmington, the Centinela rancho and the old San Gabriel river included. Let me accept this statement as correct, viz: twelve hundred tons, and for sale, i. e., not required for use among producers.

Is the above district all of the great county of Los Angeles? Mr. Cutler seems to think so—at least as a hay-producing locality.

Let us see. The writer has pretty thoroughly preambulated this county on business intent, "a specific of which was the very article in question." I will tell you what I think I know of the chances this people take of coming to want in hay.

The table I will submit I mean to represent what can be proved up, and I may add that to the best of my ability to judge from observation and constant inquiry, I risk nothing in asserting that four-fifths of the entire population of the county, "outside of the city," have made provision for the maintenance of their individual stock, thus precluding the necessity of purchasing from those having hay to sell:

TABLE.	Tons.
Cutler's statement, viz	12 0
Add west of city, including Cahuenga, Ballonas and Santa Monica	1200
Santa Ana, including the Swamp Garden Grove and Westminster	120
Norwalk and Artesia	250
Santa Anita	300
San Gabriel	150
El Monte	400
Pomona and Spadra	1150
Azusa	150
Total	6000

Six thousand tons, or six carloads at ten tons each. Does this look like a hay famine?

When you consider that our shippers are not able to send one car of hay where they formerly sent six car-loads to the Territories east of us, and by reason only of values claimed here by producers and holders, it appears to me that those persons who are trying to force themselves to believe we are in danger of a hay famine, are, to draw it mildly, just a little "off."

I have not included alfalfa hay; neither does my table cover all the hay in the county to-day.

I am respectfully,
S. L. DEWEY.

A Nuisance.

To the Editor of The Times:

Residents of the eastern portion of town, who are making use of the newly graded Buena Vista street, are greatly inconvenienced by a bad leak in the large water supply pipe near Bumiller's winery. A stream nearly an inch in diameter spouts out of the pipe, scaring horses and ruining the road. Can't those having control of the water-works stop this leak and cover the pipe? It has been in this condition for two weeks. TOPOS.

Grapes.

The Mission grapes are beginning to put in an appearance. A very choice lot was received by Woodhead & Gay yesterday, and they think in the course of a week or so this delicious grape will be plenty in the markets.

By Universal Accord,

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful medical investigation, and their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative pill that medical science can devise. Being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use, and being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take. In intrinsic value and curative powers no other pills can be compared with them; and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them when needed. They keep the system in perfect order and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required. For sale by all druggists.

GARROTERS.

A Man Assaulted on the Street by Robbers.

Yesterday morning, about three o'clock, as Henry Krause, just in from Arizona, was perambulating that classic street where frail women and fast men most do congregate, he was attacked from behind by two men and very severely choked, their object being robbery. Krause was known to have considerable money about his person, and the garroters were possibly very much surprised to find but about $20 in his pockets when they "went through" him. He had a belt on in which he had about $800, but the robbers in their haste and on account of the fierce resistance of their victim, did not discover it. Two men, giving the names, John Wilde and Thomas McCarthy, were subsequently arrested by officers Horner and Roley, and were identified by both Krause and the woman as his assailants. They were brought before Judge Adams yesterday and admitted to bail in $1000 each.

Mr. J. A. Brown is still alive and will be found at the Occidental restaurant as heretofore.
